

The Structural Side of War

The Austrian soldiers above are stringing a telephone wire in the mountainous Isonzo district. In modern war, every part of an army must be connected with other parts and with the general staff by telephone. At the right, a model German trench and officers' shelter. The sticks prevent the earth from sliding in, and keep the floor dry. Below, Montenegrins are filling shells for their mountain artillery

