

Underground Engineering at the Front

A subterranean passage connecting two distant French trenches. Such is the danger of being shot by enemy sharpshooters while passing from one trench to another, that long communicating tunnels are dug. Sappers start from both ends, and meet in the middle. The illustration shows the first connection between tunnels which have been begun a considerable distance apart, and which are about to be united