

There's more to War than Shot and Shell

At left, Germans establishing a great army telephone exchange somewhere along the southeast Russian front. Below, oil-can, lantern and measuring cup—part of a German officer's outfit

At the right are shown men developing and printing plans at the front, for the use of aviators and officers

In Russian Poland, the German officers keep an accurate record of every peasant by means of his photograph. Ten pictures are taken at one sitting and then cut apart with their respective numbers. These are then filed with the military governor