

Shelter Bridges on the Line Near Dixmude

© Kadel and Herbert

This peculiar series of bridges constitutes a protective measure that war conditions have evolved. The railroad is a narrow-gauge line near Dixmude which is used for transporting supplies on low flat trucks by man-power. Owing to the liability to bombardment by airplanes, it was found necessary to provide shelters, for which reason these bridges were built at intervals as a protection for both men and cars. Compare with officer for height