

Rapid-Fire Guns and Their Victim

A new British machine-gun equipped for cavalry work. The gun is extremely light, and may be easily carried on the back of one horse. In an emergency it may be assembled for action in a very few minutes

At right, the first of the famous Fokker monoplanes to fall into the French lines. These light and speedy machines played havoc with the Allied air forces. They are little different from the familiar French Morane except that they are overpowered, thus gaining great speed

Below, the warning cry "A Taube" sending the men of the anti-aircraft automobile crews sprinting to their cars. The motor-cars are equipped with high-angle rapid-fire guns

© Underwood & Underwood

© International Film Service